state in the Union, baving $1,700 square miles, or 52,288,000 acres. The five states having a larger territory are Texas, California, Nevada, Colorado and Oregon. But all of these states. with the exception of Texas, include large areas of mountainous country not capable of agricultural development. From one-fourth to three-fourths of the area of California, Nevada, Colorado and Oregon is mountainous. Nearly every acre within the borders of Kansas will preduce crops. Kansas has, therefore, a larger acreage of agricultural land than any other state in the Union except one, Texas.

Seven territories, Dakota, Montana New Mexico, Arizona, Wyoming, Idaho, and Utah, all have a larger territorial area than has Kansas, but they, like California and Colorado, include within their limits vast mountainous regions. Kansas will, therefore, when every territory is formed into a state. still be, in agricultural area, the second state in the Union.
